

LAWCHA

Labor and Working-Class History Association

The Labor and Working-Class History Association is an organization of scholars, union members, students, and citizens promoting a wider understanding of the history of working-class people, their communities, and their organizations in the United States. The association has adopted Labor: Studies in Working-Class History of the Americas as its official journal and conducts an annual conference for the presentation of new research.

Benefits of LAWCHA membership include

- a one-year subscription to Labor (four issues)
- RSS feeds and online access to Labor at labor.dukejournals.org
- the LAWCHA newsletter
- access to the society Web site, lawcha.org, including an online membership directory
- eligibility to receive prizes and travel grants for graduate students
- access to online resources for educators

Read a sample issue of Labor online at labor.dukejournals.org.
