

A Note on the Reproduction of Figures, Tables, and Graphs in EASTS Articles

If your EASTS article contains figures, tables, or graphs, please bear the following in mind:

The use of figures, tables, or graphs that have been taken directly from other people's published or unpublished work is covered by copyright law. In general, "fair use" allows the reasonable use of such material if its original source and author are cited and any copyright acknowledged. EASTS requires the authors of all articles to make sure that their use of such material does not breach copyright law, and you will be asked to show that you have obtained any necessary permission. EASTS reserves the right to remove figures, tables, or graphs for which due permission has not been obtained if it considers that such use might break copyright law.

Please note that we only print in black and white; if any figures, tables, or graphs need to be in color to be comprehensible to readers, we would need to ask you to pay for the cost of color printing (around US$500).

Please ensure that any images are in .tiff or .jpeg format and have a resolution of 300dpi or above at a width of at least 4.5 inches. We would suggest that you include pictures taken by yourself with a smartphone or digital camera, as this is the easiest way to avoid copyright and resolution issues. Please note that you might still need to obtain permission to use your own photograph of a subject to which copyright law applies.
